IN THE CEO'S WORDS

Where do I begin?

About the school going girls who wax eloquent. The state-of-the-art labs in Government schools. The community routinely accessing public health centres. The teachers who deliver articulate multilingual lectures. The solar panels that dot the nooks and corners of the villages. The pickle making units run by capable SHG's gaining steam. The kitchen gardens spotted in every home. The bustling Anganwadi Centres filled with children and pregnant women.

The long queues at monthly health camps. The refurbished schools, bright and brimming classrooms... What words could do justice to encapsulate the colossal change I've seen?

There was something poetic about my visit into some of the villages of Telangana, that are living testimony to the intense work done and the immense fruit borne of years of effort. My every run-in was the story of new age India – Meena who conducts 'Suraksha' lessons for adolescent girls in Shabad, Mallesham who dropped out from an English medium school to join our newly refurbished Government School, Archana who now runs an independent tailoring unit employing 2 women and Venkata who goes door to door talking about testing for non-communicable diseases.

It was humbling to witness the change we are a part of – and it wouldn't have been possible without the sheer might and motivation of my dear team at the grassroots. With pride in my heart, I bring home a sea of stories...

STORIES OF CHANGE

The Transformative Power of Education and Determination

Often, when dreams encounter financial barriers, determination and resilience become the companions that transform obstacles into stepping stones toward success. Karuna Kadam was born in an underprivileged family, with the aspiration of becoming a software developer. Recognizing the challenges she faced in pursuing her dreams and her strong desire to break through her circumstances, Concern extended a scholarship through our partnering NGO, propelling her academic journey forward. Through her dedication, she carved her academic path, ultimately earning a B.Tech degree. Following rigorous interviews and selection processes, Karuna's hard work bore fruit when Wells Fargo acknowledged her exceptional skills, offering her a position as a software developer in Hyderabad with an impressive annual package of 24 LPA. Karuna's remarkable success stands as a testament to the transformative impact of education and resolute determination.

Our efforts to make a meaningful impact in the lives of vulnerable communities is further strengthened.

Nurturing Dreams through the Digital Realm

Meet Bandla Naga Raju, a resilient 34 years old from Amodagiripatnam Village, Chirala, Andhra Pradesh. Being unemployed for the longest time he embraced his family's weaving legacy, finding solace in this generational craft.

The pandemic posed challenges for Raju, with dwindling orders and a sluggish market. Post-pandemic, economic struggles persisted for weavers. Recognizing the need for adaptation, Raju joined the training on Market Exposure Programme by Concern India Foundation under the Weavers Project, acquiring skills in content creation and digital marketing.

Venturing online, especially on Facebook, yielded astounding results. Raju now has 3,998 followers and an expanding international clientele, receiving orders from America and Canada. His success showcases the power of support, digital training, and turning adversity into prosperity. It reflects our commitment to quality craftsmanship and fostering self-reliance in our community.
